Jeremy's ability to pivot while leaning in is like I have never seen. Having worked with him on several projects, admittedly NO ONE on the team could see the angles before they formed like him.

~ Michael Scanlon

In business you want capable, confident partners but loyalty and trust are paramount. I have seen Jeremy walk away from deals that would have benefitted him; however, at a great cost to a partner and watched him take the personally less lucrative deal for the greater good of the others. That is Jeremy's INVALUABLE quality that is rare in life, much less business!

~ Bryce Keffler

The Jeremy Delk method of "EVERYTHING is urgent" paired with his ultimate delegation techniques, whilst annoying when you are in it, is a marvel at getting small and large deals across the line

~ Dustin Cappelletto

Was thoroughly impressed and proud to have had Jeremy Delk speak at my Sims Speakeasy event. I highly recommend him to everyone.

~ Steve D Sims

He jumped into entrepreneurial ventures with the naivety of a child and the tenacity of a tycoon.

He started day trading at the age of sixteen, learning and failing with each trade. It is this process of adapting through failures that is paramount to his success in business.

His knowledge and skill as a day trader helped him land a job as one of the youngest brokers at Fidelity trading institutional equities in Boston, and later in New York. It didn't fulfill the entrepreneurial spark within him, so he decided to go out on his own creating Delk Enterprises. More than 20 years later, Delk Enterprises has holdings in biotech & healthcare, consumer brands, technology, building materials, and real estate development.

Jeremy now focuses on investing in and advising entrepreneurs through speaking. His upcoming book shares his reality of the Good, Bad, and UGLY of entrepreneurship. It serves as a not-so-subtle reminder of fundamental principles he's learned through his journey: while great times don't last forever, neither do the truly bad ones.
